Survey the relationship between parental emotional support & separation anxiety in kindergarten children of Hamadan

Hussein mohagheghi, abolghasem yaghoubi, serwa mohammadzadeh, Samira Akbari

Separation anxiety in children has a huge epidemic and because of its unfavorable conclusions as having problem with go to kindergarten. Outlines of this paper was Survey the relationship between parental emotional support & separation anxiety in kindergarten children of Hamadan.

Method: community of this research was all of kindergarten children 3-5 years old and their mother. From 3 location of Hamadan 1 location selected randomly and from that location 3 kindergarten and from it 25 girl and 19 boy selected as sample. Separation anxiety disorders scale (based on DSM IV TR) and parental emotional support scale were filled.

Results: results show a significant inverse relationship between parental emotional support & separation anxiety. Increasing in emotional support leads to decrease separation anxiety in kindergarten.

Conclusion: as research result show parental emotional support can in a significant way reduce separation anxiety and be as a protector versus child mental disorders.

Kindergarten, parental emotional support, separation anxiety