A comparison of attachment style and the dimension of love between the teenagers with and without relationships the opposite gender

Aim: The aim of this research was to a comparison of attachment style and the dimension of love between the teenagers with and without relationships the opposite in high school students.

Method: In this research the method used was causal-comparative. The population included all the students studying. Among this 200 participants were selected based on Cluster sampling. The means measuring in this research were the attachment of attachment style questioners of RASS and STENBERG triangle love questioners.

Result: The data analysis showed that having close attachment style among the group which had a connection with the opposite gender was much more compared with the other. This difference was completely significant meaning based on anxious attachment and style of relationship. There was also a significant difference between the two groups regarding affection and caprice. The average of the girls and boys in all aspects of love which could be easily seen through the analysis. Among the girls and boys having no relationship with the opposite gender, no significant difference was seen regarding attachment style.

Conclusion: Identify factors associated with relationship with the opposite gender will Prevent of damage to these types of relationships.

Key word : Dimensions of love , Attachment of style, Relation with opposite gender